Introduction

Getting To Football is back for the 2022-23 season!

I must begin this new edition with an apology: you didn't get the final two editions which I'd been expecting to produce last season. That happened for various reasons which needn't concern us here, but the bottom line is that my own priorities have changed a bit and I just didn't have as much time to devote to Getting To Football as I once did. I'm expecting to produce three editions for the 2022-23 season; this one at the start of August, a more complete one at the start of September, and a third in January, although there will be silent updates in between times if I notice anything horribly wrong.

For want of time, not all of the sports and leagues which are normally covered in Getting To Football are covered in this edition. Football in Ireland, Northern Ireland, and Wales will reappear in the next edition, together with football in Scotland below the top five levels covered here. Men's and women's hockey in England and rugby union in England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales will also reappear in the next edition, while Gaelic football and hurling in Ireland and and shinty in Scotland will reappear in January.

Having got the apology out of the way, I must continue with a warning. Bus services are disappearing all over the place at the present time, and that trend seems likely to continue. This does mean that some more venues – especially but not only more rural venues – have become more difficult to get to and from than in the past, so be sure to check the details of infrequent services with operators before relying on them.

Bizarre notion as this may seem in a hot July, it won't be long before we are all back watching football on muddy fields in unlikely parts of the country – and it is my job to get you there, so now I'd better get on with it!

The entries should be largely self explanatory. For every team, the address of the ground is given, followed by the name of the most convenient railway station (or tram stop, or, in a few cases, ferry port) to which to travel. This is not necessarily the nearest railway station to the ground, although more often than not it is. After that, the guide provides directions from the railway station, tram stop, or ferry port to the ground. If the distance to the ground is less than 0.875 miles, then only walking directions to the ground are given. The abbreviations L and R stand for left and right! If it is further than that, then the guide provides details of bus services where such exist. Unless stated otherwise, all directions assume that matches are played on Saturday afternoons.

All of the entries are to the best of my knowledge correct at the time of going to press, but I fear that I cannot accept responsibility for any errors or their consequences. Should you identify an error, please let me know by email (edwardsandrewd@yahoo.co.uk) and it will be corrected in time for the next edition. I must thank assorted correspondents, many of them members of the NonLeagueMatters Forum (www.nonleaguematters.co.uk), for their valuable contributions and corrections to the various draft releases and earlier editions of this guide.

Most of the content of this work is in the public domain, but I assert ownership of the presentation and of that part of the content which is not. Should any club or league wish to use part of the content in a programme or on a website then please contact me about this. Except as regards full time professional clubs and the leagues in which they play there will be no fee attached to use of the information, but I shall be disappointed if I find the information being used without reference to me.
